Women's social networking site is launched

Site Inspires Women to Turn Online Connections Into Offline Fun, Friends, Adventure, and Relationships

San Francisco, April 24, 2007 – For FabFemme, a new social networking site for gay and bisexual women that launches today, the true sign of success is when members actually log off and shut down their computers.

That's because FabFemme is the first social networking site dedicated to helping women easily turn online connections into real-world fun, friends, adventure, and relationships.

A vibrant online network showcasing sophisticated search, planning, and invitation tools, FabFemme is dedicated to inspiring women everywhere to reach out, form rewarding bonds, and get the most out of their social and professional lives.

The debut marks the national expansion of FabFemme, a successful, six-year-old lifestyle and networking organization that has enriched the lives of thousands of gay and bisexual women in the San Francisco Bay Area and Los Angeles.

Founded by Susan Lubeck, a veteran technology marketing executive, FabFemme has attracted a passionate, grassroots following of career-savvy women thanks to its diverse range of inspired events and activities – from intimate dinners to group theater outings and day trips to large-scale dance parties.
